Enter Viola, a Captain, and sailors

VIOLA           What country, friends, is this?
CAPTAIN        This is Illyria, lady.
VIOLA           And what should I do in Illyria?
                  My brother he is in Elysium:
                  Perchance he is not drowned; what think you, sailors?
CAPTAIN        It is perchance that you yourself were saved.
VIOLA           O my poor brother! And so perchance may he be.
CAPTAIN        True, madam; and, to comfort you with chance,
                  Assure yourself, after our ship did split,
                  When you and those poor number saved with you
                  Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
                  Most provident in peril, bind himself,
                  Courage and hope both teaching him the practice,
                  To a strong mast that lived upon the sea;
                  Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
                  I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves
                  So long as I could see.
VIOLA           [giving money]
                  For saying so, there's gold.
                  Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
                  Whereto thy speech serves for authority,
                  The like of him. Know'st thou this country?
CAPTAIN        Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born
                  Not three hours' travel from this very place.
VIOLA           Who governs here?
CAPTAIN        A noble duke, in nature as in name.
VIOLA           What is his name?
CAPTAIN        Orsino.
VIOLA           Orsino! I have heard my father name him;
                  He was a bachelor then.
CAPTAIN        And so is now, or was so very late;
                  For but a month ago I went from hence,
                  And then 'twas fresh in murmur – as, you know,
                  What great ones do the less will prattle of –
                  That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.
VIOLA           What's she?
CAPTAIN        A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
                  That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her
                  In the protection of his son, her brother,
                  Who shortly also died; for whose dear love,
                  They say, she hath abjured the company
                  And sight of men.

VIOLA           O that I served that lady,
                   And might not be delivered to the world
                   Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
                   What my estate is!

CAPTAIN       That were hard to compass,
                   Because she will admit no kind of suit,
                   No, not the Duke's.

VIOLA           There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
                   And though that nature with a beauteous wall
                   Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
                   I will believe thou hast a mind that suits
                   With this thy fair and outward character.
                   I prithee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
                   Conceal me what I am, and be my aid
                   For such disguise as haply shall become
                   The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
                   Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him;
                   It may be worth thy pains, for I can sing
                   And speak to him in many sorts of music
                   That will allow me very worth his service.
                   What else may hap, to time I will commit;
                   Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.

CAPTAIN       Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be;
                   When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

VIOLA           I thank thee. Lead me on.
                   [Exeunt]

From Twelfth Night by William Shakespeare
