Bryn was too excited to eat much breakfast the next day. He was waiting for the sound of wheels in the driveway. When they came, Bryn hid behind his mother and tried to peep around her legs for his first sight of Clare. All he could see was a lady carrying something wrapped up in a blanket.

"Bryn," smiled his mother, "this is Aunt Jo."

[braille page 9, facing page 8]

Aunt Jo bent down. "And this is your little cousin, Clare," she said.
Bryn looked right into the face of a tiny, sleeping baby.

As Bryn put away his trucks and his books, he didn't really feel bad that Clare couldn't play with them. It meant he had a little more time to have the big, blue truck all to himself. He would lend her his big, blue bear instead. After all,
